A Historic Evening

Mrs. Blackman can't understand that watching the Chicago bear's game on Monday night is more important than reading two or three chapters of The Red Badge of Courage. Does she sincerely believe that I would sit down at 8:00 pm kickoff time and read some book about a war that happened before my great-grandparents were born. She says that it's historic. Well, I can't think of one thing more historic than what's to come on Monday night. I'll bet ninety percent of the us will be watching this superbowl run. I suppose however that Mrs. Blackman is one of the 10% who believes that the world doesn't stop for football.
