Love and War

In ancient Greek mythology Helen and Menèleaus was marryed to each other. The marriage was disrupted however when a man named Paris fell in love with Helen who's face was considered the most beautifulest in the world. Paris kidnapped Helen (some say she didn't mind) and together they fled to the city of Troy. Disgraced and deceived Meneleaus was pretty much fit to be tied and sent the hole Greek army to Troy to get Helen back. This timeless tale is wrote down in The Iliad, an epic work by Homer. Reading the story today you might think how ridiculous it was to fight a war over a lost love, on the other hand, we don't have no photographs of Helen whose face has forever been called "the face that launched a thousand ships".
